

The Paycheck Fairness Act (H.R. 7)

Equal Pay for Equal Work

More than five decades after the passage of the Equal Pay Act of 1963, a woman still makes only 80 cents, on average, for every dollar earned by her white male counterpart. That gap is a persistent reality for women in the workforce, particularly women of color. Compared to white men, Black women are paid 61 cents, Latina women are paid 53 cents, and Native Hawaiian and Pacific Islander women are paid 62 cents.

Pay inequity not only affects women – it affects children, families, and our economy as a whole. Women are the sole or co-breadwinner in two-thirds of American families with children and providing equal pay to women would have a dramatic impact on their families.

If women were paid the same as men, the poverty rate for all working women would be cut in half (from 8.0 percent to 3.8 percent) and the poverty rate for working single mothers would be cut by nearly half (from 28.9 percent to 14.5 percent).

The wage gap undermines women's financial security and limits their ability to save for retirement, contributing to more women living in poverty. For the 15.3 million single women—divorced, widowed, separated, and never married women living on their own—equal pay would mean a significant drop in poverty rates from 10.8 percent to 4.4 percent.

The gender pay gap occurs across almost all occupations and industries.

The Paycheck Fairness Act is an important step toward ending gender-based wage discrimination and ensuring all women receive equal pay for equal work. Specifically, The Paycheck Fairness Act would:

- Require employers to prove that pay disparities exist for legitimate, job-related reasons and not based on gender alone;
- Ban retaliation against workers who discuss their wages;
- Limits how employers can use the salary history of prospective employees;
- Create a negotiation and skills training program;
- Remove obstacles in the Equal Pay Act to allow workers to participate in class action lawsuits that challenge systemic pay discrimination; and
- Improve the Department of Labor's (DOL) tools for enforcing the Equal Pay Act.

The Paycheck Fairness Act is cosponsored by every House Democrat.
